The True Ending of The Little Mermaid

...Once the prince thought that the princess had saved him. He tells her he loves her, and they go back to his kingdom to get married. The little mermaid realizes that she will die the next morning because she couldn't make a human love her and gain a soul.

Her sisters know what will happen to her, so they tell her that they gave their hair to the sea witch to get a magic dagger. They give the knife to their sister.

The Little Mermaid has to put the knife into the prince's heart. This way, his blood will touch her feet, and they will merge into a fish's tail. Then she can return to the sea and stay with her sisters and grandmother, who are very worried.

But when the Little Mermaid sees the prince and his wife sleeping together in their tent on the ship, she can't do it. She throws the knife into the sea and turns into foam on the water. Her spirit goes up into the air, and she has turned into a daughter of the air. As the Little Mermaid ascends into the atmosphere, she is greeted by other daughters, who tell her she has become like them because she strove with all her heart to obtain an everlasting soul. Because of her selflessness, she is given the chance to earn her own soul by doing good deeds for humankind for 300 years, and she will one day rise up into Heaven.
